People who observed American politics before the election of MR. LINCOLN, or even before the BUCHANAN-FREMONT contest in 1856, are well aware that the tone of the anti-slavery party has very much altered since MR. SEWARD ...ment that the tone of the anti-slavery party ...has very different from what it is now. There ...great consternation among ...ed to the Roman Catholic ...million, the Abolitionists—were simply anxious to ...clare the Federal flag and the Federal Union ...ere when they found that no ...ere made to interfere with slavery ...pretended a right to interfere with slavery ...a local institution, but they said, "Our nation ...is disgraced by the stain on its flag; let us wash ...draw from the institutions all support, moral ...and support, let each State maintain it or suppress it as it likes best." Here was an honourable, high-minded programme; perfectly justifiable, wise in its meaning, and worthy of any party in a free country. But the position of affairs in the North were then perfectly unsuited to their views. For when legal authorities said to them, "Any attempt then to withdraw the national support from slavery is contrary to the Constitution and to the spirit of the Union," they replied, "Then we must abrogate the Constitution ...and secede from the Union." This was a resolution which the worldly wisdom of which Englishmen might doubt, but the practical wisdom of which, as easily as cast-iron shot from the sides of the old wooden ...ship, they could not deny. ...ole advantages of using such a ...ld not force itself on the attention ...rst, irrespective of any efforts on ...ir part, and when it did so, it ...overball thing with great force ...ed to the Roman Catholic ...ndicate a serious injury, should ...ke a serious injury, should ...ir wounds remain sutures, and cause ...whole frame to suffer.
