

FINE ARTS ACADEMY.

(LONDON, NOVEMBER.)

Brighton.—The exhibition of art may be just the weather for holiday folk, but they by no means help to fill the rooms of such institutions as the Academy. Everything considered, however, the exhibition during the last few days has been a success, and visitors who inspected the galleries found not only an agreeable lounge, but plenty to occupy attention, and the chief features of the exhibition were a considerable number of portraits. The artist who had already made his name in the hotel bar, H. H. Fenton, R.S.A., a right well-known painter, has put up a series of local subjects, the chief being a interesting view of St. Michael's Tower, and "Mincing Hall" (1893) (40); there were also works which were illustrative of life in the slyles of the city. A vigorously painted picture of "Exmouth Bar" (18) is contributed by F. J. Wigder, the work being a fine attempt to represent a phase of nature which many visitors to the Bay have seen before. The artist has given life to the movement of the sky, and the artist has been highly successful in his handling of the lower part of the picture. Only one work has been furnished by A. G. Ulrich, which is a study of "One" (18) (45), a small, graceful, thoughtful, and treat very pleasingly of a charming bit of country. "The Old man" (18), by W. Wright, is an admirable "little piece"; and A. Duke's "Furness" (47) may be described as a good example of the artist's work. By Samuel Birkett, the title Charles Gibbs has given a transcript of considerable merit, one of these which he has on the walls at the exhibition; the others are "A Glider," "Dawn," "The Dancer," "The Dancer," "Dawn," and "Wings." The additional Miss Clara Mortella has been probably excelled on "The Old Watch Tower, Amsterdam" (18), which contains some skillful work, the artist's powers as a portraitist being developed in more recent years.

G. Gore's "Twilight in Bagdad" (18) is a delightful little picture, the artist having labored especially good for a picture in which landscape is the leading feature. A Cimarron place (35) which presents claims to originality is by W. W. Wright.

There was a goodly representation of F. Preller's portraits which are admirable. "Old Bon" (18), and again in "The village tailor" (17), both are well worthy of attention, the last named being a portrait of a man in a coat and hat, and a good example of the artist's work.

By Samuel Birkett, the title Charles Gibbs has given

(18), in which there is a nice effect of after-glow, and some old buildings tall admirably against a golden coloured sky.
